Sic Bo, meaning dice pair, is an ancient Chinese game of chance played with three dice. The object of the game is to either select the individual numbers, or a combination of the numbers, that will appear on the dice after they are shaken and rolled. The betting possibilities and their payoff amounts are depicted on the table layout by showing the faces of the dice in their many combinations. There are single die numbers, two of a kind, three of a kind, or combinations of any two or three of the dice.

Players may place their bets on the appropriate betting spots on the layout using value chips until the dealer calls “no more bets.” After the dice have come to a complete stop, the dealer will call out each die number from lowest to highest, followed by the three dice total. All winning combinations on the layout will illuminate and the dealer will collect losing wagers then pay all winning wagers. All winning combinations will be paid out at the odds in the following pay table:
